Joshua Jeffrey and Neil Newman gathered to celebrate the 199 winners.

LOS ANGELES (January 22, 2018) – The nation's leading food producers, grocers, chefs, and restaurateurs gathered in San Francisco on Friday, January 19th to honor the 199 Good Food Awards annual awards ceremony now in its eighth year; the Good Food Awards recognizes American crafters who demonstrate a commitment to creating tasty, authentic and responsibly sourced products, and in doing so, better the nation's food system. The 2018 winners are not only commended for their sustainable production methods that showcase the highest social and environmental standards, these producers protect the land, continue to push the bounds of their craft, and inspire their peers, all the while redefining the breadth of the American table.

Good Food Awards distinguished value-added food and beverage products in fifty categories including: bread, cheese, chocolate, cider, coffee, confections, eggs, fish, honey, oils, pantry, and wine. The awards also welcomed the addition of the "flour" category which encompasses both whole grain and refined flours. These foods and beverages collectively represent over $200 billion in sales, a market that is larger than the cattle and pork industries combined. The awards were presented to the top amongst 2,057 entries in a blind judging process that were submitted to a rigorous
