The place from Detroit offers 15 different dishes and drinks on the menu at an average $4.5. Despite its potential, this restaurant struggles with inconsistent service and quality. While some patrons praise the tasty food, notably the fries, issues with customer experience abound. Complaints include poorly wrapped sandwiches, unaccommodating staff, and rude interactions during service. Instances of unprofessional behavior and inadequate management response leave diners feeling undervalued, contributing to a declining sense of patron loyalty. Despite sporadic positive experiences, the overall impression reveals a need for better staff training and operational consistency to elevate the dining experience. Without substantial improvements, repeat visits may become a rarity for many customers.
