The restaurant from Long Island City offers 17 different dishes and drinks on the menu at an average $5.1.

This establishment has garnered criticism for its lackluster dining experience. Diners have consistently noted bland, poorly seasoned food, particularly highlighting disappointing chicken dishes and unappetizing falafel. The portion sizes have been labeled as minuscule, leading patrons to question the value for money, especially given the higher prices compared to other nearby options. Additionally, crucial components like sauces and fresh ingredients were either absent or insufficiently executed. While some patrons praise the breakfast offerings, the overall sentiment leans heavily towards dissatisfaction, ultimately leaving many to wonder why this restaurant maintains a presence in a competitive dining landscape.
