The guy at Ricky's said he was from Corpus Christi, which doesn't get enough attention for its tacos, according to him. But he said Ricky's has the edge on Empaqui's for better tacos, even if Empaqui's is a little cheaper and gives you five beans. And I'm inclined to agree, and not just because Ricky's was way better.

Ricky's menu is a simple spread of mini-tacos, quesadillas, burritos and full-size tacos, with carne asada, chicken fajita or al pastor, served from 7:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. Monday through Wednesday and until 3 a.m. Thursday through Saturday.

Tacos: The meat at the grill had three separate piles of meat going at the same time—chicken, carne asada and al pastor. The rest of the grill was covered with tortillas, cooking in and off as fast as they could flip them. Four mini-tacos in hot, greasy corn tortillas cost $6, six or eight. The asada was sweet and salty, and the pastor carried a thick aromatic cloud like a pumpkin-spice latte. But the chicken fajita was the best, juicy and caramelized, with grilled peppers and onions.

Stick to the menu. Ricky's beer and cheese was the worst in this series so far, a 14.99 Monday-Monday 11-ounce of monocromatic mush.
